PRESS RELEASE

PREHISTORY

8 MAY – 16 SEPTEMBER 2019

GALERIE 1, LEVEL 6

The Centre Pompidou is staging an original exhibition presenting the ties uniting prehistory with modern and contemporary art. The exhibition demonstrates how, in the great period of crisis called « modernity », first artists, then society as a whole, felt drawn to their « origins » and how a fantasy vision was built up of « what preceded History ». It reveals that some of the most important artists of the 20th and 21st century were haunted by the question of « prehistory » : Picasso, Miró but also Cézanne, Klee, Giacometti, Ernst, Beuys, Klein, Dubuffet, Louise Bourgeois, Marguerite Duras, Robert Smithson, and, among our contemporaries, Giuseppe Penone, Miquel Barceló, Wim Wenders, Marguerite Humeau, Pierre Huyghe, Dove Allouche, and others. At the same time, the exhibition presents many documents showing that, for us, « prehistory » functions as a time machine. The forces at play here draw their fecundity from their very contradictions: the need to deconstruct and the need to build new foundations; the emergence from history and the immersion in history; the desire for revolution and fear of the apocalypse.

Prehistory is a modern idea: the word itself was not established until the 1860s.

« Prehistoric » reality was built up progressively in the course of the 19th century as an inseparable body of facts, ideas and fantasies. It breaks down into three main stages:

- the growing awareness of the long duration of life on earth, based on the analysis of fossils (at the turn of the 18th and 19th century)
- the notion of a « prehistory » of human cultures, intimately connected to the idea of artistic activity (the 1860s)
- the specific recognition of parietal art (at the turn of the 19th and 20th century).

This vast body of images, hypotheses and speculations had an immense impact on the 20th century, both on the collective imagination and on individual creation. The idea of «prehistory» touched a deep vein in our imaginations. The evidence for an earth without mankind and a slow process of hominization also led people to imagine the possible extinction of the human species. The passage from hunter-gatherer (Palaeolithic) societies to agrarian (Neolithic) societies gave rise to reflections on mankind's growing power over his environment, all the way up to the industrial era. «Prehistoric» art in particular, or at least what is considered to be «prehistoric» art, was established not only as an object of fascination, but also as a concrete model for artistic experimentation of all sorts.

The tour provides a chronological progression with a preamble referring back to the turn of the 19th and 20th century (Redon, Cézanne), a central core ranging from the 1930s (e.g. Picasso, Miró, Giacometti, Ernst) through to the late 1960s (e.g. Louise Bourgeois, Beuys, Smithson) and a final contemporary part. In the course of this progression, the eyes and minds of visitors are directed toward different subjects: the expanse of time, earth without mankind, human beings and animals, gestures and tools, caves, the Neolithic period and the historic present. All punctuated by the presentation of iconic prehistoric works from the Palaeolithic and Neolithic periods : fossils, major Palaeolithic sculptures (the Venus of Lespugue and the mammoth of La Madeleine), engraved stones, knapped and polished flints, menhirs and Neolithic idols.

Lastly, a cultural narrative unfolds at the same time, evoking the invention of prehistory and its popular dissemination (results of excavations, «prehistoric» novels such as The Quest for Fire, cult films based on mythological origins such as The Lost World, Three Ages and Jurassic Park).
